Soup Ladle Stops Tiger Attack

man has been rescued from a near-fatal attack by a tiger in northern Malaysia by his wife. She had to shoot the animal to save her life, but the tiger survived. The man, identified as Tuan Munban Gediu, now badly lacerated and recovering in hospital, had tried fighting the tiger away in vain and says his wife saved his life.
With a gun she shot the tiger and sent it further into dense, unpopulated jungle in the northern state of Perak.
"I was trailing a squirrel and crushed to shoot it with my bowpie when I saw the tiger. That's when I realized I was being trashed," Mr Gediu said after he was rescued.
The tiger had been hunting for food in the jungle encroachment of the Jahai tribe.
Mr. Gediu had tried climbing a tree to escape the animal, but was dragged down by the tiger. His 55-year-old Han Besau, rushed out of the kitchen on hearing his screams and used the daggers he had good to defend him.
"I was terrified and I used all my strength to punch the animal in the face, but it would not budge." The New Straits Times newspaper quoted him as saying.
"I had to wrestle with it to keep its jaws away from me, and it would have clawed me to death if my wife had not come to my rescue."
It was the first time anyone in the village had been attacked by a tiger.
